Since ghosts lack a physical body and their physical time on Earth has passed, it stands to reason that time and distance do not apply to them as it does to mortals. For that reason they are probably able to travel across distances, at least in a theoretical sense. The real question would be if they WANTED to travel.

Psychologically perceived risk regarding ghosts is another real factor that delays destination recovery. Belief in ghosts is a travel barrier primarily among Chinese and Thai tourists during the first year of the destination recovery. The travel barriers revolving around collective beliefs take more time to overcome than physical risks from wreckage and debris. However, as the destination becomes crowded, most Thai tourists were no longer worried about ghosts at those places.
