terminology, human capital is a leading indicator. Its influence on financials is indirect via its influence on the strategy drivers in the organization. This indirect line of sight poses a challenge for measuring human capital performance. It means that organizations have to focus on more than the levels of human capital.

Six Key Principles for Measuring Human Capital Performance

The need to measure the effectiveness of human resources is related to the need to identify the key drivers of the human potential and to model the effect of its modification. Human capital is a key component of the market value in any organization. It is a source of added value, an estimate which is the basis of planning in management.
